

Thanks for signing up! Here's your download.

My 5 Favorite Places for Finding Clients

This is a preview of my full list.

Go here to check out the entire list of over 100 sources for quality client projects.

Thanks for signing up! Here's your download.

AngelList

On AngelList you'll find hundreds of projects from startups all over the world. It's my favorite place to find work because companies here are experienced and comfortable working with remote freelancers – and typically have realistic budgets.

The Setup

I use AngelList's built-in email alert feature because they don't currently support RSS. Use the tags "Contract", "Remote OK", and "freelance" along with your specialty to find project-based work you can do from anywhere.

Visit AngelList Now

Thanks for signing up! Here's your download.

HN "Freelancer" Thread

Hacker News has a monthly "seeking freelancer" thread that's member-created. Here you'll find dozens of projects by people that are well-educated on the startup and tech industry and have active projects once a month

The Setup

The screenshot shows the Hacker News search bar with the text "seeking freelancer" entered. Below the search bar, there are filters for "Stories", "by", "Date", and "for Past Year". To the right, it says "16 results (0.005 seconds)". Below the filters, there is a result titled "Ask HN: Freelancer? Seeking freelancer? (August 2017)" with 27 points, 4 days ago, and 62 comments. The description of the thread says: "Please lead with either SEEKING WORK or SEEKING FREELANCER, your location, and whether remote work is a possibility."

Create a reminder to visit the link below at the start of every month. This simple 10-15 minute task can result in hundreds of thousands of dollars in consulting work each year.

Visit Hacker News

Thanks for signing up! Here's your download.

WeWorkRemotely

WWR takes care of one of the hardest things for freelancers to find on a job board: location independence. It's one of the most active job boards on the web so you'll find a decent amount of part-time and contract work, perfect for freelance pitches.

The Setup

DESIGN JOBS LATEST POST 1 DAY AGO

NEW	Gear Stream	UX / UI Product Designer with Startup - B2B - SaaS - MVP Experience	Aug 4
NEW	MailerLite	Product Designer	Aug 4
	LaterPay GmbH	UX/UI Designer (No Longer Accepting Applications)	Jul 31

I use RSS feeds provided by WeWorkRemotely and monitored in Feedbin to check all job boards daily in one place. Feedbin also allows rules which come in handy and save a ton of time. I cover this more in the video that comes with my full list of freelance sources.

Visit WeWorkRemotely

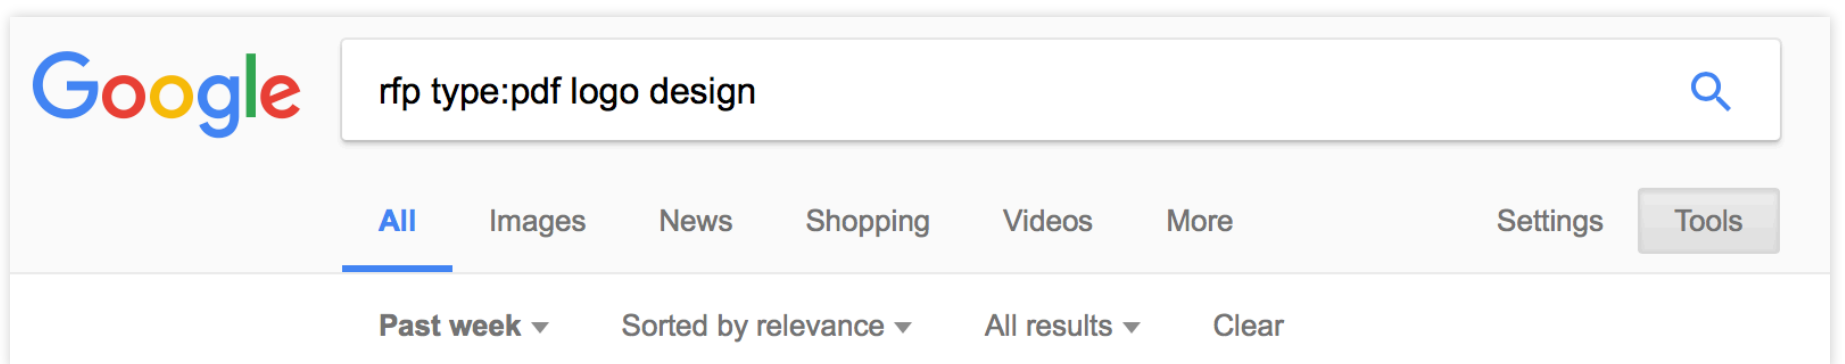

Thanks for signing up! Here's your download.

Google RFP Search

RFPs are great for agencies and freelancers because they have realistic budgets (30K+). The best place to find RFPs from all over the web is Google. Just alter your search with a few settings and you'll get dozens of active RFPs at your fingertips.

The Setup

To search Google for great RFPs use the keywords "rfp", "type:pdf", + your project specialty. Next, change the search parameters in the tools tab to past week or month — so you don't get old projects. I cover how to reply to RFPs in minutes in my full video course.

Visit Google Search

Thanks for signing up! Here's your download.

RFPDB.com

RFPDB will typically have a few RFPs every day that you won't find on Google. Since it's sortable by type of work and state/country - finding what you want is also a lot faster. RFPDB also allows you to get email alerts based on your saved settings.

The Setup

NEW RFPS

Access Control Security System

Official Cardboard Exhibit Display Board Provider

Website Redesign

PSS/SEL Course Design and Development

Once a day I check RFPdb's homepage "New RFPs" section for projects related to my specialty. If I see any, I quickly purchase it and review. One thing to keep in mind is shorter RFPs that are easy to read will typically mean a more realistic project and company. More tips in my full guide.

Visit RFPDB.com

Thanks for signing up! Here's your download.

This is just a preview of my full system for finding over 2,000 high-quality freelance projects each year.

To check out my full list of over 200 sources go here.

Thanks and have a great day! 🙌